Teacher's Remarks:

Islom has a few good points but leaves many areas for improvement. Historically, he certainly made an effort to ensure participation for all - including women. But recently his attention has faltered and his half-hearted political commitment is showing in the area of growth and quality. Most worryingly he trails towards the back of the global class on his attitude to governance and participation. He really needs a thorough rethink here and must work hard to avoid slipping further back in his regional class.
